recent work has recast these classic deposits in the context of sequence stratigraphy, wherein ironstones and related phosphatic and shelly deposits are viewed as condensed facies: the product of siliciclastic sediment starvation during periods of rapid transgression at the bases of small- and large-scale depositional sequences. stratal elements of sequence stratigraphy - conformities. sequence boundaries form from a relative fall in sea level. in fluvially dominated areas, unconformities display erosion from downcutting rivers, which may form incised valleys or regional erosional truncation. such unconformities are commonly mantled with siliciclastic pebbles. incised valleys are commonly filled with fluvial to
